

A REMOTE REVOLUTION

How Demand For Workplace Flexibility is Driving a Remote Workforce

Employees are quitting—in record numbers. They've tasted the freedom and flexibility of working remote and won't go back to a traditional office. In response, employers who embrace remote work and hybrid models are saving money while retaining staff and attracting top candidates.

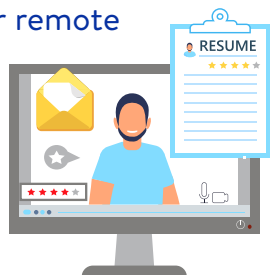

Employees increasingly are looking to join companies that offer remote work.

Online job searches for remote positions jumped 460%

between 2019 and 2021.¹

Employers who embrace flexibility in the workplace can reap financial rewards.

Remote work approaches can save employers over

$11,000

per year per employee.²

Employees are willing to resign if their companies don't offer them workplace flexibility.

4.3M

Americans, quit their jobs in August, 2021.³

That's 2.9% of the entire workforce, a record-breaking month, piggybacking on previous record months, including 4 million in July.
